ABSTRACT: From the article how words are used in the sentence structure, in which cases the use processes are described. There are such synonyms in English that they are different from the Uzbek synonyms. We can distinguish them by meaning, in other words they are used in the context of the sentence. In this process, the learner will have difficulty using synonyms.

KEYWORD: synonym, synonymy, meaning, text, oral speech, written speech, style.

Synonyms are words that are the same in meaning but different in form calculated. For example, the English words face, visage, countenance are all of them the face, that is, a part of the body. One of the synonyms and the phenomenon of having different meanings is a process of synonymy. One word in synonymy word, that is, The main-dominant word. Face, visage, countenance are synonyms. The key word in it is face, which is the most commonly used, common word. Leave, depart, quit, retire, clear out calculated.

There are two types of synonyms:

1. Ideographic synonyms;
2. Stylistic synonyms.

Ideographic synonyms are stylistic due to their hierarchical nature differs from synonyms. Although they are very close to each other, they have different meanings in the context means. For example, beautiful - fine - handsome - pretty. The word Beautiful is synonymous is the word that has the most complete meaning for the words. Fine-handsome-pretty is one of them is part of, and differs in that beauty has a strong meaning in the ranking process.

Stylistic synonyms, on the other hand, have a central meaning and emotional value within the text is distinguished by the fact that These synonyms are in the poems, in a different sense from the past, in the present in other words, may be synonymous with each other in the works. For example for, the word maid is synonymous with the word girl, bliss is a stylistic synonym for happiness is [1].

This means that synonyms differ in their stylistic features and emotional color. In our speech, take into account the peculiarities of each of the synonyms. It is important to use Synonyms have the same meaning. However, they retain their exact meaning in the process of meaning differentiation. Mostly people consider words belonging to the same nest to be synonymous. This phenomenon is an absolute mistake. For example for, the lexemes horse and animal are semantically similar, but are mutually synonymous is not considered [2].

The words wages, salary, pay, fee are also synonyms of this type. Here is the word wages simply in the sense of wages paid to workers, salary - the salary paid for services, the word pay is mainly for the salaries of military personnel, and the word fee is for the salary of a pen are synonyms that mean the amount of payment to be made. Put them in their position use prevents speech impediments.

Resign - retire listen - hear look - see

Learn - study shade - shadow treat - cure remember - remind [3].

These synonyms are also synonyms that belong to this type. For example, resign and retire synonyms also differ in terms of semantic precision. That is resigned retirement is to leave the post only if the resignation is to leave the post, but to stop working altogether, to retire. When we analyze the words hear and listen, the word hear occurs as a result of physical activity is a biological process involved in hearing and perceiving incoming sounds. Listen, the ability to pay attention to and understand the meaning of these sounds. We hear noises, we listen to music. Because the noise reaches our ears without any movement. When we distinguish between the synonyms see and look, see with our eyes someone or the meaning of looking to notice or be aware of something is understood.

Look, this is it directing our Eyes in a certain direction are, more specifically, the ability to see. The words learn and study are also very similar in meaning is calculated. But they also differ in the subtleties of meaning. That is, learn to acquire knowledge or skills by learning or knowing, and study by memorizing facts; it's like going to school.

One of them, work and job. The word work is more general than the word job. Work in general the word job refers to a specific profession, referring to the purpose and the work done to achieve the goal is a related word.

Synonyms usually differ in one or more ways. One of them is meaning may be different. Below is a semantic distinction of some synonyms. Let's look at some examples. For example, when we distinguish between the English words miss and lose the following conclusion can be drawn.

We went to the cinema last night. It was a great movie. We missed the first ten minutes - We went to the movies last night. He was amazing. We lost him the previous 10 minutes. The word miss in this sentence is not exactly used in the sense of losing.

Maybe lose and find the meaning of non-existent situations is understood. But:

I lost my keys and suddenly I find them - I lost my keys and I found them by chance.

The word lose in this sentence does not mean to lose, but to lose, that is, one meaning the loss of an object.

There are also words that have different difficulties in the process of distinguishing meanings creates. When we distinguish between the words arrive and reach, the spiritual difference between them is the text appears inside.

Finally, I reached my prize - Finally, I achieved my goal. That is, the lexeme reach is a scheme of achieving something by one's own efforts expressed.

I arrived home - I arrived home.

Arrive; on the other hand, is used for arrival cases relative to a place or space. Reach and although the words arrive are also synonymous, they only have a different meaning within the text possible.

When we analyze the words pick and select, we see that the difference between them is very close. That is, the word select means that there is an opportunity in the selection process. For example: Select Christmas present for a child is the choice of a Christmas present for children. There is a choice to be made; we can see that there are no restrictions. Pick is, used to select objects that can be used in the future, i.e. to point. For example: pick new words.

In the process of distinguishing between answer and reply, the answer is for a more oral style of speech knowing that the word reply is specific to the style of written speech and speaking it we can observe in the process. Also, for general cases of reply, the answer is short suitable for responsive situations. These are synonyms using prepositions we can also distinguish. For example, answer a question, but in the form of answer to question we can't talk. Maybe, reply to a question. The word reply takes on the preposition to as long as it can be different. When we distinguish between synonyms, we find that they are different that they have a different emotional character, different within the text, semantically unique we can see that Synonyms do not have a single meaning, they do we can see that each has a different meaning. One of the most commonly used words is survive and outlive - to live, to live longer. For example: No mother wants to outlive her children do not want to Or, She survived her husband by ten years - she lived with her husband for 10 years.

In the process of comparing these words, pay attention to the additional meaning in them should. Both words have the same meaning, but the word survives also means to survive used:

She definitely didn't know how to survive in the forest - she doesn't know exactly how survived in the woods.

In short, English synonyms are colorful and they are spoken can be widely used in the process or when working with text. This is it to make our speech productive, to avoid various boredoms, and in the future streaming helps.
